INTRODUCTION.

THE design of this publication is an accurate display of Coats of Arms, borne by the Nobility and Gentry of the county of Gloucester.— These are arranged in three divisions; in the first, those Arms that are prefixed to Sir Robert Atkins's History, of the edition of 1712, which included the most respectable families of that age. From what documents these were collected, we are not informed, for in the course of that work no Arms are recorded as the decoration of houses, windows, or sepulchral monuments.

As transmitted, they are faithfully inserted; not, we trust, without propriety, as an interesting part of a County History, which owes not its present value solely to its scarceness, but as being the production of a man eminently conversant in the local history of his country, and of that province in particular, where his possessions and influence were so extensive.

In point of accuracy, he was certainly deficient, so far as it respected the state of parochial affairs in his own time ; but in his accounts of the earlier gradations of property, as his sources of intelligence were the grand records of the nation, he was comprehensive and exact. To extenuate the first charge of negligence, we must consider, that his eminent station precluded the labour of personal investigation, and actual survey. Much was left to casual information ; and where report is adopted without examination, there must necessarily be error.—It may not be improper to observe, that it is much more easy to correct his errors, than improve his plan by a total alteration ; and the more ready way to doubt, than to invalidate his authorities.

In the year 1779, Mr. Rudder, of Cirencester, published, according to propofals, a “New History of Glocestershire,” as an improvement on Sir Robert’s plan, as including Arms, monumental Inſcriptions, Genealogies, and Memoirs, deduced to that period, and not to be found in the former work. How far he has excelled the firſt History, it is not neceſſary to enquire.—With his Heraldry all our buſineſs reſts. None of the Arms which he has regiſtered are engraven, which ſuggeſted the idea of exhibiting them emblazoned, as alphabetically arranged in his index. This conſtitutes the ſecond part.

The third diviſion comprises ſuch Arms as are not in either hiſtory of the county, and ſuch only who have generously encouraged this attempt. The Editor hopes that none will be displeased at the omission of Coats of Arms not duly certified, as he cannot presume to interfere with the just and anciently established rights of the College of Arms.

A full disquisition of the subject of Heraldry will not be expected. That it was introduced during the Crusades, as furnishing badges of distinction to Knights and Esquires, is a matter of general notoriety. To form some conclusion in what proportion these honors were distributed, an account is subjoined (for the gratification of the curious) of the names of those Knights of this county, who served in the army of King Henry III.

 about a century after the more general introduction of Heraldry into this kingdom. This list, in the French of that age, is copied verbatim from a manuscript authenticated and published in the Antiquarian Repertory.

In the Bodleian Library, MSS. Dodsworth, is a List of the same kind, certified in the second of Edward II. 1309, in which many of these names occur, and the whole number is encreased to eighty.

Though it might now be difficult to describe what property these individually held in this county, yet we may well conclude, that some good reason may be alledged why they should be attributed to Glocestershire, in an account of their fellow Knights of every province in the nation. But these are matters of antiquarian research, rather than immediately connected with our present subject*.

* Of the grants of the celebrated Camden, which, during his Office of Clarencieux, amounted to 159, eight only are to families of this in those wars by the bearers of them. We are told by Guillim, that the Fleur de Lis was worn as an ensign by those who had done military services in either invasion of France by the English.—The Garb or Sheaf is a charge peculiar to the Nobility and Gentry of Cheshire, as being the cognizance of Gilbert le Grosvenour, nephew of Hugh Lupus, established as the first Count Palatine by William the Conqueror, and is usually borne by families connected with that county.

A test of the antiquity of a Coat of Arms is in general its simplicity, a single ordinary, or two at most, constituting the most noble.

Bezants were first borne by the soldiers of the Holy Wars, being the current coin of Byzantium (the modern Constantinople) with which the stipends of the army were discharged.

The Mullet is properly the rowel of a spur, (from the French Molette), and not a star of five points.

The Estoile is usually radiated. M Mullets were borne by those of knightly houses, particularly when of gold.

Martlets, as birds of passage, were used by foreigners of all nations settled here; but particularly by the descendants of those who attended the victorious William.

Annulets were granted in coat armour to those who were in confidence, or entrusted with especial commissions by the King: the Annulet or Ring being the gage of the royal favour and protection.

Escallops were the peculiar badge of those who had performed religious pilgrimages to the Holy Sepulchre on Mount Calvary. The Pilgrims or Palmers were distinguished from other Religious by their Cockle or Escallop worn in the hat, and their Potent, an ancient word signifying a Crutch, in which sense we read it in Chaucer,

"So eld that thee ne went

"Afoote, but it were by Potent."

From hence a kind of factitious Fur was invented, resembling the Heads of Crutches opposed to each other, called Potent Counter-Potent.

Crescents are said by some writers to allude to victories over the Turks; and described by others as being adopted by the second houses of great families, or by men who have become eminent from mean origin.

Several reasons are given why the arms of Females should be displayed on a Lozenge or *Fufil.—The Lozenge is now more generally supposed to have been a Cushion of that shape, and the Fufil is evidently the Spindle used in spinning, both demonstrative of the sedentary employments of women.

Of the more common ordinaries, the derivation is more easily ascertained. The Bend was a Sash

* Morgan, in his Treatise on Heraldry, supposes the Lozenge to have been a Jewel or Ornament of that shape worn by Ladies in their head-dresses, and usually decorated with some heraldic distinction.

worn across the shoulders, from the Italian, La Benda. The Fesse a Girdle or Belt. The Chevron was two Pales placed in that form to mark out the ground in tournaments. The Saltier was an engine used in scaling walls.—Most of these have their diminutives, when borne in greater number in the same escutcheon.

The dishonorable ordinaries, or abatements of honour, were a Delph, a Point Dexter, a Point in Point, a Point Champion, a Point Plain, a Gore Sinister, and two Gussets *. The laws of chivalry, which had ever the redress of injuries, and the establishment of just rights, as their invariable object, appointed these abatements, as a punishment of delinquency against the military code, or the common good of society.—But abatements were usually confined to military offences, such as killing prisoners during capitulation, revoking a challenge, or flying colours; and even for lighter faults, as intemperate boasting, or criminal neglect of discipline. In cases of treason, the Escutcheon was totally reversed. When the peace of private families was invaded by adultery or rape, the delinquent was forced to bear the Inescutcheon reversed, or the Gussets, as a badge of his infamy.—In every instance of armorial degradation, the Metals, being in themselves specifically noble, could not be borne as emblazoning the disgraceful charges, which were required to be either Sanguine or Tenne, colours commonly used to signify dishonor. It would be repugnant to those principles of justice, which were the characteristic of chivalry, to suppose that this Stigma was ever transmitted to posterity. The punishment was merely personal, and proportioned in point of duration to the nature of the offence. On which account we hardly know that such ordinarities were ever used; indeed, in the present state of a science so obsolete, they must universally fail of their intended effect.

From the enthusiastic love of equity and honor, that marked the darker ages, the spirit of chivalry arose. Its general influence and romantic motives are attributed by the moderns more to the force of the imagination, than the dictates of sound judgment; and as produced rather by general barbarism, than partial refinements.

Upon these institutes, the science of Heraldry was formed, while by its connection with the graphic art, it could add external ornament to the Meritorious, by delineations of rude invention, and shapeless splendour.— These are the only remains of antiquity, from which the hand of modern improvement has abstained. And who would wish to exchange for the more polished inventions of later times, Devices, which have ever been regarded with a kind of religious veneration?

We might enlarge this digression, but are unwilling to obtrude on those that know, or to weary the patience of those who are ignorant of this particular science.

In the later centuries, Arms* were more general, because most men of property, without military acquirements, pretended to them. In the year 1484, King Richard the Third established the College of Arms, on its present foundation, investing them with full powers of summoning those that

* The Welsh Families, amongst other pretensions to antiquity, have collectively but few Coats of Arms, the same being borne by many different names. Ellis, Bodville and Bodurda, Jenkins, Hughes, Griffith, Williams, and Richards, bear Sable a chevron between three fleurs de lis argente, as being derived from Colwyn, one of the Princes of the Fifteen Tribes of Gwynedd, or North Wales. CAMDEN.

assumed the arms of others, to appear in the Earl Marshal's Court, and of granting Escutcheons to families of newly acquired consequence. This privilege multiplied the figures of course, and varied the differences. Forms of every description in the infancy of the graphic art, without any exact resemblance, if we may judge from the specimens now remaining, were universally introduced.

The creation was exhausted in the representation of the different parts of it, and to gothic fancy alone we owe the introduction of Gryphons, Mermaids, Wyverns, and Harpies. Every invention of art, whether military or mechanic, has been at one time or other a badge of heraldic honor. When the Arms referred absolutely to surnames, they were called by the French, Les Armes parlantes,—Canting or punning Arms,—and these, though some ancient precedents exist, were not common 'till the commencement of the seventeenth century, when they prevailed under the auspices of King James. This circumstance proves most of them to be of modern date.

“The hereditary use of Arms was not established till the reign of Henry III. The last Earls of Chester, the Quinceys, Earls of Winchester, and the Lacies, Earls of Lincoln, varied still the father from the son.”—The Veres and Berkeleys altered their paternal Coats, when “they had taken up the Cross,” the phrase of that day for engaging in the Holy Wars. Gentlemen at that time usually bore the Arms (or at least the principal ordinary of them) of those Noblemen or Knights from whom they held lands in fee, or under whose banner they fought. We find in Camden (Remains, p. 214) that Hubertus de Burgo, Earl of Kent, who bore for his Arms, "Gules seven lozenges vairè," granted lands at Elmore, in this county, to Anselmus de Guise, 2d of Edward I. 1274; whereupon the said Anselmus bare the same Coat, with a canton or, charged with a mullet pierced fable, for difference*.

* Arms were in some instances bequeathed by will from a Knight to his Esquire. They were likewise alienated by voluntary cession during

In the present age, when the great influx of wealth by commerce hath elevated many of mean origine into the rank of Gentry, a Coat of Arms is usually granted or assumed to support the pretension. In some instances the bearings, which are attached to particular names, are assumed by life, as well as testamentary bequest. The form of the second mode is recorded as being ratified by the following instrument:—

Noverint universi per presentes me Johannam nuper uxorem Gulielmi Lee, de Knightly Dominam & rectam hæredem de Knightly dedisse concessisse hanc præsentem cartam meam confirmasse Ricardo Peshale, filio Humfredi Peshale, scutum armorum meorum habend. & tenend. ac portand. & utend. ubicunque voluerit sibi & hæredibus suis in perpetuum. Ita quod nec ego, nec aliquis alius in nomine meo aliquid jus vel clamium in prædicto scuto habere potuerimus sed per presentes sumus exclusi in perpetuum. In cujus, rei testimonium, sigillum meum apposui. Dat. anno regni Hen. IV. 14to. 1412.

A distinction was then made between a Gentleman of Blood and a Gentleman of Coat Armour, who was the first of family who bore Arms; from whom the third only in lineal descent was considered and enrolled as a Gentleman of Blood. CAMDEN UT SUPRA.

all of the same, when they are not otherwise provided. It is common to observe, that those of real family pretensions insist on them with arrogance; while the low born man of wealth returns the contempt, with just reflections on the inefficacy of consequence, that has ceased for ages.

With regard to genealogical deductions and rights of quartering, we must confine ourselves to those Arms only that occur in Mr. Rudder's History, on sepulchral monuments.

To a candid public, this little compilation is humbly submitted, with hopes that it may be found to amuse, where it cannot inform.

To those, who have encouraged this work by a liberal subscription, the Editor returns his grateful acknowledgments, trusting, that in their reception of it, they will not withhold an indulgence, which he has deserved only by his labour to obtain.
